Dear Joe,

Thank you for the opportunity to view "Going Blind." It is an incredibly important film and truly needed to educate the medical community and the general public. Nationally, less than 10 % of people with vision loss or legal blindness who could benefit actually access low vision or vision rehabilitation services. Unfortunately, many people are not learning Braille or how to use a prescribed long cane; they are not accessing low vision exams and optical aids; they are not finding inspiration in the lives of successful people with vision loss.

Your film not only informs, but gives hope to the millions of people who could benefit, if only they knew where to turn.

Your personal story along with your exquisite visualizations of vision loss have tremendous impact on the viewer. You capture the different "realities" of vision loss since each person you interviewed adjusts in their own way. I would certainly use this film for training of staff at VISIONS and to share with our 4000 consumers and their families.

VISIONS/Services for the Blind and Visually Impaired, a nonprofit social service and vision rehabilitation agency, is celebrating 84 years of service. We serve people of all ages with vision loss in New York City through free services to achieve their personal goals at home, at work, at leisure and in their communities.

Please let us know if there is any way we can help promote "Going Blind." And to get the word out that services do exist to help people cope and learn non-visual ways to stay involved, independent and active.

Best of luck with this essential project.

Sincerely,

Nancy D. Miller, LMSW
